

The very thought that the content of the XM radio service is being challenged is outrageous. I pay for the service I get from XM and I do not see why it is the business of any other body to limit the content I get from this service. I have travelled over 75,000 miles in the US in the past 3 years and the XM service has been invaluable. I can select a channel and hear exactly the information I want to hear without searching the "local" stations and most of the time never finding the information I am looking for, such as weather conditions or traffic.
